HE WRITES ANOTHER MYSTERIOUS LETTER TO MR. WECHSLER.

The Murderous Attempt Made Because M. was Considered to be a Mean Man-The Police Arrest Six Men on Suspicion, but Discharge All of Them Ex-Except One-Mrs. Wechsler's Condition.

LUFF Capt. McKelvey, of Brooklyn, finds that the Wechsler infernal machine mystery grows deeper every day. He has had six men in custody, all ex-employees of Wechsler & Abraham, but, after a searching exthem have been released from arrest, the Captain being confident that they are innocent of any participation in the

As to the sixth prisoner, the police are very eticent. He was arrested early this morning in Dutchtown by Roundsman John H. Klein, of the Fourteenth Precinct, and at once taken to headquarters. He is a thick-set man of perhaps thirty-five years, with a stubble beard of several days growth and a small brown moustache. His clothing is fairly good. He wears a brown coat and a Derby hat. He looks like a porter or driver. Klein says that he is an employee of the firm. He is believed to have so-cialistic leanings. He was taken into Superintendent Campbell's office, and after a while Detective Shaughnessy came in with Maggie Lee, the buxom domestic in the employ of Henry R. Heath, of 333 Wash-ington avenue. Maggie says a man with ington avenue. Maggie saw a man with a parcel for Mr. Wechsler halt in the doorway of Mr. Heath's house at about 9 o'clock Friday night. She was brought down to see if she could identify the prisoner down to see if she could identify the prisoner as the man.

The man was placed in a row with about a dozen men in citizen's clothes, but Magne could not pick him out. She said that the man whom she saw wore a slouch hat and looked like a foreigner. Later in the day the police will confront the prisoner with the messenger boy Joyce. The latter is a keen-eyed and intelligent lad, who it is believed will have no difficulty in identifying the man who gave him the parcel if he once gets his eyes on him.

Mr. Wechsler received a note this morning purporting to come from the man who sent the infernal machine. It was written on a scrap of white paper and read as follows.

Mr. J. Wicheler.

Size: Them articles which I sent you belong to you. I wanted to kill you because you are a mean man. You will suffer for it yet. If I see you on the street I will nock the brains out of you.

mas. You will suffer for it yet. If I see you on the street I will nock the brains out of you. Yours truly.

Tread in the morning papers that you offer the more reward. I cannot begd you those pawn tickets because you know who I am. Your true friend.

288 West Fifty-eighth street, New York City.

This was wrapped in a patent medicine circular and the whole enclosed in a small white envelope of the same make as that accompanying the murderous package. The writing of the note was large and straggling and not at all like that of the letter which was stained by Mrs. Wechsler's blood.

The superscription of the second envelope is, however, almost exactly like that of the first, and the police believe it is the work of the same hand. The letter received to-day was post-marked New York, Oct. 30, 5 p. M., Station H. It strengthens the growing opinion that the man who sent the package may yet be found in this city.

The detectives are going over the list of present and past employees of the Wechsler & Abraham firm with a view to finding a possible clue. Experts who have examined the splinters of the box which caused the trouble have come to the conclusion that it contained about six ounces of giant powder and numerous small fragments of iron and glass.

Dr. Rochester says that Mrs. Wechsler's Rochester says that Mrs. Wechsler's condition has improved very considerably and that she is now out of danger. The little and that she is now out of danger. The little boy is also progressing rapidly.

The messenger boy, John Joyce, falled to identify Roundsman Klein's prisoner as the man who gave him 26 cents to deliver the ex-plosive box at Mr. Wechsler's house.

WIFE-MURDER AND SUICIDE.

After a Quarrel, William Sholer Shoots His Wife and Then Kills Himself.

[SPECIAL TO THE EVENING WORLD.] ITHACA, N.Y., Oct. 31 .- William Sholer and wife, of Candor, separated last Friday after a quarrel, and Mrs. Sholer went to house of Sylvester Lynch, a neighbor. Her husband called on her last evening and a reconciliation was effected. The parties then went to an upper room, where, it is supposed, the quarrel was renewed, as they had been gone but a few minutes when two shots were heard. Lynch went up and found Sholer and wife lying across the bed, both dead, The man had shot his wife through the head and then blown his own brains out. They had been married a year but the union was a stormy one from the first. They were both under thirty years of age.

WORKING FOR THE GEORGE TICKET.

ings to be Held.

Great activity was discernible at the headuarters of the United Labor Party at 918 Broadway this morning. Preparations were making for numerous meetings in all parts of the city, speaks were being assigned and campaign literature was being hurried off by the basketful by the energetic Jerome O'Neill and the erudite James Degnan. Henry George, jr., was bustling around attending to matters which his father left him in charge of when he started for Gloversville this morning at 8 o'clock. The elder Mr. George speaks at that place to-night, and will return to-morrow in time to open up a vigorous speechmaking campaign in this city.

The smiling face of "Jim" Archibald loomed up in great shape, and before The Evening World reporter could get in a few inquiries. Mr. Archibald told him things were booming for Henry George, and the prospect was bright.

"We are whooping it like dandies," said the witty paper-hanger, "and we are going to do so until after election."

Joseph Wilkinson, the handsome leader of the Journeymen Tailor's Union, remarked:

"We are in good shape for work and we are going to. Our big corps of speakers will talk every night, and meetings will be held in each Assembly district every evening until election day."

in each Assembly district every evening until election day."

From Jerome O'Neill, candidate for the Assembly in the Twenty-third District, and who is in charge of headquarters, it was ascertained that a meeting will be held in Battery Park to-night at which Dr. McGlynn will do the talking, and a big meeting has been arranged for at the corner of Sixth avenue and Fifteenth street, at which Messrs. Post, Gorsuch and Wilkinson will speak. In the Twenty-third District meetings will be held in the Harlem Casino and in Sulzer's Music Hall, at which Lawyer Leubuscher, Dr. McCarthy, William Gorsuch, Wilbur O. Eastlake, Dr. Anketell and Mr. O'Neill will deliver addresses.

Extensive preparations are being made to wind up the campaign with a huge massmeeting on Friday night, Nov. 4, in Cooper Union Hall. All the big guns will be on hand and arrangements will be made for overflow meetings.

An expert in election counts has presented a plan to the Campaign Committee whereby any fraud or manipulation of the vote after the count can be detected, and steps will be taken to carry it out. Those who know say it beats the fifth inspector scheme.

"CRADLE'S EMPTY, BABY'S GONE."

Suit to Restrain Organette-Makers From Using Copyrighted Music.

[SPECIAL TO THE EVENING WORLD.1 Boston, Oct. 31.-An interesting case was heard in the United States Circuit, to-day involving the right of makers of organettes to reproduce upon the perforated sheets used in those instruments any piece of music which is subject to copyright The case is that of William H. Kennedy

The case is that of William H. Kennedy and the Automatic Music Company against John McTammany, ir., and is a bill in equity to restrain the defendant from producing on perforated sheets the song "Cradle's Empty, Baby's Gone,"

The Automatic Company is a licensee of Kennedy, who composed the song, and asserts that the production of the piece on the sheets for the organette is substantially copying the same, and is an infringement of the copyright. This is a test case, and is brought for the purpose of settling the question whether or not the reproduction on the perforated sheets amounts to the same thing as a reprinting in the form of music. The case has been before the court for several years upon questions of pleading and is now for the first time to be tried upon its merits.

TOO MUCH BEER IN THE CELLAR.

Fall River Officers Have Trouble in Making a Sunday Liquor Raid.

[SPECIAL TO THE EVENING WORLD.] FALL RIVER, Oct. 31.—Officers had a lively time yesterday in seizing beer from an unlicensed place. They called on Michael Blake with a search warrant calling for the seizure of 150 gallons of beer. When they entered Blake's cellar at least ten hogsheads of beer were discovered. They were in a quandary, as they could not seize more than the warrant called for. To make matters worse, the only opening by which they could get the barrels out was a trap-door in the floor above. Not having the necessary tackle to hoist the barrels, a building-mover was sent for. Before he arrived with the necessary tackle a big crowd had gathered and began to throw stones at the officers. Officer Riley was badly cut and more officers were despatched to the scene. The building-mover finally arrived, and, by the aid of tackles and ropes, he hoisted two hogsheads out of the cellar. The others were left behind. for the seizure of 150 gallons of

Cet in Pacific Mail Rates.

The report that the Pacific Mail Steamship Company had been forced to make large reductions in its through freight charges on its Pacific Coast business by the competition by the new Marquis Del Campo rival line, which has just put on the first of its steamers, did not create even a ripple of excitement in Wall Street this morning.

"The whole thing amounts to this," said Mr. Rdward Lauterback, the Vice-President of the company, to a reporter of THE EVENIX WORLD this morning. "This Del Campo line has put on one or two of its vessels, and we have other competitors on the Pacific Coast trade, and in order to make it unprofitable for those vessels to stop at ports at the same time with our steamers we always cut rates temporarily to get all the trade we can. This, however, only applies to our local business and does not effect through rates in the least. HIS LIFE HAMMERED OUT.

MAN BRUTALLY MURDERED IN A BOWERY LODGING-HOUSE.

ohn Hennesey, a 'Longshoreman, Beaten to Death by Two Men in the Phenix House for Creating a Disturbance in the Bedrooms - One Man Held Him While the Other Beat Him Until He Was Quiet.

MAN apparently about forty years old, who is supposed to be John Hennesey, employed as longshoreman at the Ward line steamers, Piers 16-17 East River, was murdered at the Phenix House, a 15-cent lodging place, at 53 Bowery, at 12.30 o'clock this morning. William Downey, night clerk,

Eldridge street station waiting the result of the coroner's inquest. The Phenix is occupied by scores of men, among whom, the police say, are types of the worst characters to be found in the city. It was here that the dead man registered nine days ago under the single name of Hennesey. He was generally sober and well behaved, and seldom attracted notice by any Hennesey. He was generally sober and well behaved, and seldom attracted notice by any disorderly doing.

Last night he went out early, and returned this morning, as far as can be learned, the worse for liquor, and started to his bed, which is on the second floor and numbered 86. He sat down on the edge of the cot and began to undress, singing all the while, and growing boisterous. Finally a German named Joseph Tilman, who occupied an adjoining bed grew angry at the disturbance and made some sharp remark about letting people sleep. This so incensed Hennesey that turning around he struck Tilman. The disturbance attracted the attention of Clerk Downey, hastening upstairs the clerk took in the situation at a glance, grappled with the disturber, who in the meantime had drawn a revolver. As far as can be learned, when the souffle that followed was over, Hennesey was dead. A terrible gash over the right eye at the temple was the only wound of any serious nature found on the body. It was the wound that caused death.

The affray lasted less than fifteen minutes. Day Clerk John Goetchious is said is to have taken a prominent part in it. He is charged with holding Hennesey while his fellow clerk rained blow after blow upon the defenceless man.

When the man was quiet, Downey dragged with holding Hennesey while his fellow clerk rained blow after blow upon the defenceless man.

When the man was quiet, Downey dragged him by the shoulders, with the feet trailing on the floor, through the narrow passage between the beds, and dropping him there, left the house in search of a policeman. Patrollman John H. Holland, of the Eldridge street station, was the first he met and, calling him, he asked his assistance to quell a disturbance in the house. When the policeman resched the place life had left the body. The single garment on the dead man showed evidence of a terrible struggle. He wore nothing but a finance undershirt, which was torn almost to shreds and twisted about the body in a most inconceivable manner. The officer at the station was notified and Patrolman Holland, assisted by Officer George H. Munn, took the two clerks into custody.

According to Downey's story Hennesey came in drunk, walked to his bed and then up and down the corridor brandishing a revolver and making a terrible disturbance, the hastened upstairs to quiet him, and in the struggle sought only to wrest the weapon from the fellow's hands. He admits striking him with his fist, but denies using a weapon of any kind. This story is contradictory to that told by witnesses of a stricking and children, who gazed at Haynes and children, who gazed at Haynes and is contradictory to that told by witnesses of the assault.

Charles Kusofsky, a boy about fifteen years old, says that when Hennesey entered he grew boisterous. He began to undress and awoke his neighbor, Tilman, who said:

"Can't you shut up, I've got to go to work to day." Then Hennesey, turning about quickly, said:

"Who is it telling me to shut up?" and followed the query with a blow at Tilman, at the same time drawing his revolver. Then the clerk, Downey, the boy says, came up stairs with a policeman's billy in his hand, which, however, he threw away before reaching the bed. The two men grappled for possession of the revolver and finally Downey caught Hennesey's two hands in his and gradually forced him back upon the bed. Then a second man, in a white shirt, who is supposed to be Goetchious, came running to Downey's assistance, and while the one held Hennesey the other hammered him until he became quiet.

Morris Stone, who is also at the station as a witness, says that he saw Downey strike Hennesey at least a dozen times, though whether a weapon was used or not he does not know.

Hennesey at least a dozen times, though whether a weapon was used or not he does not know.

Goetchious admits striking the dead man half a dozen times, it is said, and he admits, too, cleaning up the blood which stained the floor when Hennesey was forced down between the beds during the struggle.

The billy, which was seen in Downey's hands and which the boy witness declares was thrown away, cannot be found. From the appearance of the revolver that weapon must have played a prominent part in the affray, although whether it was the instrument which inflicted the fatal blow or not is unknown. The revolver is a plain nickle-plated affair of the bulldog pattern, of 32-calibre, and a six shooter. When the officers found it in the house it was in pieces, the cylinder being forced out, the barrel separate from the stock, and the screws and minor portions scattered about the floor. Two cartridges were missing, although they could not have been fired, as the cells look clean and well ciled. There are no signs of blood on any portion of it, the barrel being bright and the stock clear. The oil in the cylinder is fresh, which would not be the case, had the parts been separated to be cleaned.

In the dead man's pockets were found a lady's knitted purse, containing a pair of beads, 95 cents in change and a small clasp knife.

In the dead man's pockets were found a lady's knitted purse, containing a pair of beads, 95 cents in change and a small clasp knife, together with a silk hand-worked hat-band bearing the initials W. H. H. This inclines the police to the belief that the man's name may be William H. Hennesey, although there is nothing definitely known regarding him. Several persons called at the Phenix House to-day but none could identify the body.

Coroner Messemer will have a post-mortem examination to-day, and it is likely that a charge of murder will be preferred against the two clerks, as well as a lodger, who is under arrest as a witness.

The Phenix is the house where Greenwall and "Butch" Miller, who are awaiting sentence for the Weeks murder in Williamsburg last spring, were caught. At the house the men who slept within a dozen feet of the assault heard nothing of it, or claim that they did not. The employees say nothing about the matter.

At its close the great congregation arose and the members of the Army stood in silence around the casket, many of them with tears streaming down their cheeks. Suddenly, without apparent signal, there began a strange, solemn song, which was continued for a half-hour, while the congregation marched around the casket to look upon the features of the dead. The procession was then reformed outside and took up its march, escorting the hearse to Hope Cemetery, nearly two miles away, which was reached after sunset. FIRST THE "SPIDER," THEN HAVLIN. Commy Warren Will Pight One or the Other with Great Pleasure.

[SPECIAL TO THE EVENING WORLD.] Boston, Oct. 31.—After long waiting Jack Havlin will at last be glad to hear from Fommy Warren, of Minneapolis. The following telegram was received last evening from Minneapolis:

Tommy Warren returned yesterday from Duluth. He has been in correspendence with Ike Weir for a week past trying to arrange a match with him. Weir asks that $1,500 be guaranteed him for coming here. Warren says he will not get it for him, but he will give him all gate receipts if he wins the fight and nothing if he loses; or he will divide receipts, three-quarters to winner and one-quarter to loser after expenses are deducted. He will give Weir until next Tuesday to decide the matter and unless he hears from him within that time he will deposit $900 and sign articles sent out here by Haviin's manager. Every one here wants to see Weir and Warren fight, and if they should come together a big crowd will be present. Havlin will draw very well.

Assembly District with boodle, and the friends of Boss Power and Col. Fellows are confident that a big boodle will get Col. Fellows a big vote. The district bosses of Tammany Hall and the County Democracy are beginning to see a ray of hope for Col. Fellows.

They have used the boodle before, and they are dyed-in-the-wool believers in the efficacy of the boodle in politics. They would rather have $5,000 on election day than a truck load of party platforms or organization puffs of candidates. The bosses have resolved to collect a bigger boodle than was ever before raised for a local fight. It promises to be five times larger than the boodle spent to elect Cooper Mayor in 1878, and ten times larger than the boodle scattered in the old Tenth Congressional District in 1874.

After the latter Congressional fight was ended Boss Power, who was then the Tammany boss in the Sixteenth District, was called to account for the expenditure of $30,000. The bosses have also begun a financial campaign among the 10,000 salcon-keepers of this city. The bosses would like to blackmail each one of them out of an assessment.
Each district boss is to receive an assess. Each district looss is to receive an assess, ment from each liquor saloon-keeper in his district. The bosses are to be aided in the blackmailing scheme by police captains who owe their promotion to them. The blackmail to be levied is to run from $10 to

This is the opinion of those who have studied the use of the boodle.
